Welcome to Astronomy Ireland

There are many different types of telescopes and each one has its own special features. Some are designed for viewing the Moon and planets, while others are better suited for deep sky observing. The choice of telescope depends on your budget, the type of observing you want to do, and the amount of space you have available. It's important to do your research and choose a telescope that will meet your needs for many years to come.

When you choose a telescope, it's important to consider the quality of the optics. Good optics will give you sharper images and more detail. It's also important to consider the mount, as this will determine how stable the telescope is and how easy it is to use. A good mount will allow you to track objects in the sky accurately and comfortably.
